General Outline:

Module 1: Social Psychology (weeks 1 and 2)

Humans are social beings; hence, social psychology affects all of us. We constantly think, feel and act not only as individuals but also – and sometimes primarily – as members of social groupings. Social psychology studies human interaction – its forms, causes, consequences and psychological processes. In this course, we will study how human behaviour and thinking is influenced by the actual or imagined presence of others. Students will get an overview of social psychological theories and will learn to apply these theories to everyday problems and situations. We will provide a general overview of social psychology and we will discuss topics such as attribution processes, influence and obedience, attitudes and persuasion, prejudice, aggression and violence, intergroup behaviour, or prosocial behaviour. The course will comprise lectures, group work, self-assessments and exercises.

Module 2: Organisational Behaviour (weeks 3 and 4)

Organisations consist of the people who work within them. This course therefore attempts to build the students’ understanding and skill in leading and managing people and organisations. The objectives of this course are (1) to raise the student’s awareness of the centrality of organisational behaviour to understanding organisational functioning and effectiveness; (2) to show how an understanding of human behaviour via the disciplinary basis of psychology profoundly deepens our analysis of organisations, and (3) to demonstrate the core value of an understanding of organisational behaviour to a manager’s ability to achieve organisational goals. We will provide an overview of organisational behaviour and we will discuss topics such as perception, motivation, leadership, groups and teams, conflict management, and gender and leadership. The course will comprise lectures, group work, self-assessments and exercises.
Programme:
- The seminars are held in English (about 50 contact hours)
